Course Loads

How many courses (and credit hours) should you take during your first semester? Consider the following:

- Credit hours tell you how much time you will spend in class each week.
  - Example: If you take 12 credit hours of course work, you will be in class 12 hours or more per week, labs require additional hours.

- Plan for 2 hours of study time for each credit hour of course work.
  - Example: If you take 12 credit hours, you will need to make available an additional 24 hours per week for studying.

- Consider work hours.
  - Examples: If you are working more than 20 hours per week, you should not take a full class load. If you are working 40 hours or more per week, you should take no more than one or two courses per semester.

- Consider time for family, friends and other relationships.

- Consider personal, travel, leisure and SLEEP time!!

New students often sign up for more courses than they can realistically handle. Consider each of the factors above in deciding on your first-semester course load.

Frequently dropping and retaking courses looks bad on your transcript and leaves you feeling discouraged.

Have a very good first semester by taking a course load that allows you to be successful in each course and provides you with time for a good life beyond your college work!
