I. Week/Unit/Topic Basis:

Because this course is designed as a management simulation it is necessary to present management students with tasks, exercises, simulations and other activities similar to those they can expect to encounter in the workplace. And, because the workplace very often leaves managers with no time to anticipate and little time for decision making and planning, this course is designed to treat students the same way. Consequently, they are given assignments no more than a week in advance and on frequent occasions their assignments are made on the spot. The scheduling of assignments may change as the semester progresses due to events in the social and economic environment and, more often, due to events in class; that is, results of specific exercises or conclusions drawn in case discussions may make it appropriate to move up some activity planned for the future or to create new assignments not originally planned.
